Conference Hears College Entry Bias Decried

Only if we "clean up discrimination in our own house" can we come with clean hands to "the people between Russia and the West," Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, said at a regional conference on discrimination in higher education. Held in Chicago, there were two days of sessions with 175 educators present from about seventy-five colleges and universities in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. The conference, second of three scheduled regional meetings on the subject, is sponsored by the American Council on Education, with the cooperation of the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith.

Dr. Hutchins declared that "money as revenue has always inhibited us from doing what we know was morally right." He cited the experience of his own university in opening its hospitals to Negro patients and its medical school to Negro students, amid fears that untoward economic and social results would ensue, and declared: "The result was that there wasn't any result," none of the predicted consequences having materialized.

"We should get rid of the illusion that in the United States we have the best education institutions in the world," Dr. Hutchins said. "Many European countries have universities where students may attend free or at nominal cost. Higher education in America is free — if you have the money to pay for it."

Dr. Andrew C. Ivy, vice-president in charge of professional colleges of the University of Illinois, who is conference chairman, said there was no justification for either public or private non-church-related institutions to select or [illegible] on the basis of [illegible]. An exception to this rule, he

Urges Jewish Bridge Between U.S. And South America

A "good neighbor program" to cement relations between the Jewish community of the United States and the more than half a million Jews in South America, and to aid South American Jewish communities in the development of their educational and cultural activities, was recommended to the Plan and Scope Committee of the American Association for Jewish Education, meeting in New York, by Dr. Aharon Kessler, director of community services and consultation for the Association, in a report on his recently-completed survey tour of five major South American countries.

Dr. Kessler, who studied Jewish educational and cultural activities in Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, and Peru on behalf of the Association and the World Zionist Organization, declared that the Jewish communities in South America have many serious and exaggerated misconceptions about Jewish life in the United States. "They grossly overestimate the extent of anti-Semitism in the United States", he said, "and are completely misinformed about the vigor and scope of our community life. As a result, the natural affinity between Jewish communities on the American continent, faced with many similar problems and with almost identical aims, is beclouded and prevented from expressing itself. A bridge must be built between U. S. Jewry and the Jewish communities of Latin American," Dr. Kessler declared.

Pointing out that Jewish communities in South America were developed by mass immigration during the past 50 years, Dr. Kessler said, "they are, in many important respects, at the stage of the U. S. Jewish community of 50 years ago, and can learn a great deal from [illegible] of Jewry in the United States."

Charges Israel Seeks To Shelve W.Z.O.

A 1951 budget totaling more than $2,000,000, largest in the history of religious-Zionist movement, was approved by more than 1,000 delegates at the thirtieth annual national convention of the Mizrachi Organization of America, in Atlantic City, N. J., to carry on the group's activities in America and Israel.

The budget, which envisions the expansion of Mizrachi's numerous undertakings, was presented to the delegates by Israel Berman, of Brooklyn, national treasurer. The delegates also approved the goal of the American Mizrachi movement to raise an additional $1,000,000 in the coming year for the Jewish National Fund, land-purchasing agency of the World Zionist movement.

Mr. Berman said the organization would budget another $500,000 for youth and education activities in America through the Noer Mizrachi movement and the Mizrachi National Education Committee.

Undertakings which the $2,000,000 budget will enable in the Jewish State, Mr. Berman said, will include the establishment of the Mizrachi middle-class settlements and cooperatives, expansion of the Mizrachi institutions, the building of low-priced housing projects, construction of children's homes, the first structures of a proposed liberal arts and science college in Tel Aviv, and provision of school equipment to establish Mizrachi educational institutions, according to the New York Times.

Rabbi Wolf Gold, member of the Jewish Agency Executive, told the delegates that the united religious bloc in Israel did not have any wish to impose its ideas or conceptions of Judaism upon other segments of the Jewish population in the new nation. Rabbi Gold, who [illegible] presidium of the World Mizrachi executive, charged that recent imputations of theocratic designs on the part of the religious bloc were "a grave misunderstanding and erroneous impression of the true desire of Israel's religious community."

Rabbi Gold urged that the Jewish Sabbath should be officially and lawfully recognized as the day of rest for the entire Israel Jewish population, "in the city as well as in the field, in business as well as in industry."

Dr. Pinkhos Churgin, president of the Mizrachi Organization of America, urged the Israel Government to foster greater unity among all its elements and to subordinate party interests and ideologies to the "upbuilding of the Jewish state for the welfare of the Jewish people." Dr. Churgin, who is dean of the Teachers Institute of Yeshiva University, New York, denounced "the recent subversion of the higher interests of building Israel to political party ideologies."

Declaring that "greater clarity and frankness" are necessary on the part of the Israeli Government in its relation to the World Zionist movement, he said: "Every thinking Zionist is aware that the creation of the Jewish state has caused a new situation which compels deep-rooted changes in the structure of world Zionism, as well as a new crystalization of its goals. But it is inconceivable that upon achieving its triumph, Zionism's mission has abruptly come to an end and that its complete purpose is spent."

Asserting that the Israeli Government "obviously has lost faith in Zionism" and "has indicated an eagerness to rid itself of the world Zionist movement," Dr. Churgin said: "This same attitude seeks to quarantine Israel from Jews living in other lands. Neither the Premier of Israel nor any one else can dictate to the Jews outside Israel that they dare not react to developments in Israel. Mizrachi will resist this thoughtless and empty conception and will insist upon the unity of the Zionist movement and the fullest implementation of its destined role in the future of world Jewry."

Dr. Churgin expressed his organization's solidarity with the united religious bloc in Israel in the government crisis. Rabbi Max Kirshblum, national executive vice-president of Mizrachi, announced plans to create in Israel next year the first all-religious agricultural settlement for 100 American Jewish families.

Rabbi Joseph H. Lookstein, of New York, was elected president of the Mizrachi national education committee. He is rabbi of the Congregation Kehilath Jeshurun.

A resolution urged the U.S. Government to give Israel a grant-in-aid "commensurate with its needs and its role as democracy's friend in the Middle East." The delegates called Israel "an able and ready ally for democracy both in time of war and peace."

In another resolution the delegates urged President Truman and Secretary of State Dean Acheson to initiate direct peace talks between Israel and the Arab states in order that "an effective and lasting peace may be speedily realized in the Middle East." The delegates charged that the Arab states had kept the Middle East in tension and unrest "by such warlike acts as blocking the Suez Canal to transportation, cutting off oil supplies to Israel and preventing individual Arab states from negotiating peace with Israel."

The resolution stressed that "Israel has fully demonstrated its willingness to cooperate with the organs of the United Nations in their efforts to effect peace." Referring to the recent conference in Washington at which representatives of forty-five national Jewish organizations pledged to raise a billion dollars in the next three years for Israel's immigration and upbuilding program, the delegates resolved "to exert our maximum effort in behalf of the United Jewish Appeal."

The convention also agreed that a college of liberal arts and sci-

Major U. S. Jewish Groups Unite First Time For Special Aim, To Raise Billion For Israel In Three Years

A three-year program, under which American Jewry will raise $1,000,000,000 for the settlement of new-comers in Israel and the economic development of that country, was unanimously adopted at Washington, D.C., by 1,200 representatives of forty-four national organizations representing a majority of American Jews.

At the concluding session of a national planning conference for Israel and Jewish rehabilitation, the delegates agreed unanimously, as a first step, to call upon Jewish communities in the United States to make available to the United Jewish Appeal by the end of this year $50,000,000 in cash urgently needed by Israel.

The three-year program, designed to raise $1,000,000,000 while Israel provides $500,000,000, includes four major points. By adopting the program, the delegates took the following actions:

1. Pledged support for the bond issue first suggested by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion in September to fifty American business men. Under the plan Israel would sell bonds to the American people. Having received the indorsement of representatives of American Jewry, Tel Aviv is expected to complete plans for the bond issue and to discuss the matter with American authorities, including the Exchange Commission. The sale of bonds is not expected to begin for several months.

2. Urged the United States to help Israel through grants-in-aid, loans and other forms of financial support such as have been given to other governments.

3. Called for intensification of U. S. A. campaigns through which Americans contribute toward transportation and settlement of immigrants in Israel.

4. Called upon American business men to help Israel develop its economic structure by investing there. The resolution noted that Israel has already established favorable conditions to encourage private investment.

The adoption of the statement of principles, in which the four-point program was included, was described as being "historic" in that for the first time all the major Jewish fraternal and service organizations, fund-raising bodies and community councils had united in behalf of a specific program.

The statement, read by Rudolf G. Sonneborn, chairman of the meeting's resolutions committee, after noting that Israel has emerged [illegible]

Speakers, emphasizing the seriousness of Israel's immediate situation, called for the raising of $50,000,000 by December 31 through payment by communities and individuals of pledges still outstanding, payments on account of pledges made for the 1951 U.J.A. campaign, borrowing by communities from banks, loans from other Jewish organizations which have funds available, having individuals or groups make loans from banks on personal indorsements and other methods of raising cash quickly.

Main speakers were Leon Keyserling, chairman of President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers; Abba Eban, Israeli Ambassador to the United States, and Mr. Sonneborn.

Mr. Keyserling noted that no free nation in the world, not even the United States, can stand alone, says The New York Herald Tribune. Under these circumstances, he said, while Israel is attempting to stand on its own feet, it will continue to need the help of American Jewry. He said that, although taxes in the United States will increase, the strength of the economy is so great that in the next few years the American people will have more money left after taxes than they did in 1948, 1949, and 1950.

Ambassador Eban predicted a closer relationship between the United States and Israel and described the $1,000,000,000 aid program adopted at the meeting as [illegible]

Cabinet Wins Confidence Vote

The new coalition cabinet formed by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion was approved by Israel's Parliament in a 69 to 42 vote of confidence. There were two abstentions. The 13-man cabinet is now composed as follows: Prime Minister and Minister of Defense, David Ben-Gurion, Mapai. Foreign Affairs, Moshe Sharett, Mapai. Finance, Eliezer Kaplan, Mapai. Education, David Remez, Mapai. Labor and Social Insurance, Mrs. Golda Myerson, Mapai. Communications, Dr. Dov Joseph, Mapai. Agriculture, Pinhas Lubianiker, Mapai. Interior, Health, Immigration, Moshe Shapira, Orthodox. Religious Affairs and War Sufferers, Rabbi Judah L. Maimon, Orthodox. Justice, Pinhas Rosen, Progressive. [illegible] Affairs, Minister [illegible] Yaacov Mayer Gert, non-party.

The party balance remains the same as in the former coalition, with the addition of the one non-party Minister. The Ministry of Supply and Rationing has been abolished, and its functions divided among several ministries. Debate on the confidence vote lasted eight hours and speakers of all parties participated. Opposition leaders demanded immediate elections. Rabbi Mordecai Nurock announced that the majority of the Mizrachi Party in the Orthodox Bloc would support the Government, but David Zvi Pinkas, of Mizrachi, who was at one time slated as the Orthodox Bloc candidate for the Ministry of Trade and Industry, remained in isolated opposition and abstained on the vote of confidence.

The differences between Mapai and the Orthodox Bloc were ironed out in a seven-point agreement reached by the two parties on October 30. The parties decided on:

1. an agreed economic policy as the basis for a stable government until the end of the first Knesset's term;
2. collective responsibility of Government members;
3. guaranteeing security, rights

recognized the desire of institutions to broaden their student body and thus give preference to students from an extensive geographic area, or to give preference to persons residing in the community that supported the institution.

Dr. Louis Wirth, Professor of Sociology at the University of Chicago, lauded fair educational practices legislation.

"We must recognize," he said, "that unless the right thing to do is done by all at the same time, even in so advanced a field as higher education, many hesitate to take the first step. They fear not only that they will be alone and will be regarded as eccentrics but that they will have to bear the major burden while others escape it altogether."

URGES JEWISH

In a series of recommendations aimed at the creation of a bridge between the communities, Dr. Kessler proposed that a "Voice of American Jewry" program, similar to the Voice of America, be created to provide South American Jewish periodicals and other organs with clear, accurate and sustained information on Jewish life in the United States. "South American Jewry can benefit greatly from an understanding of the coordinated, professionally-directed and well-organized activity of U. S. communities," he said, "and this understanding will help them to cope with their own problems." Such a program, he declared, will also serve to improve the whole pattern of relations between South America and the United States.

Pointing out that South American Jewish community life is almost devoid of adequately trained professional leadership, Dr. Kessler recommended a program of systematic interchange of personnel in the religious, educational, and social service fields between U. S. and South American Jewish communities, and the provision of opportunities for South American community functionaries to study at universities in the United States. Jewish education in the countries he visited, Dr. Kessler stated, is characterized by uniformly low enrollment, less than 25 per cent of the children of any Jewish community being registered in the Jewish schools. The curriculum of these schools, he said, is largely ethnic and cultural in emphasis, rather than religious.

Dr. Kessler pointed out that the majority of the educators in the South American Jewish schools were trained in Europe, rather than in countries where they now teach.

To help rectify this situation, Dr. Kessler recommended a program of assistance, including the preparation of educational materials such as texts and audio-visual aids, in Spanish, Portuguese, Yiddish and Hebrew, training opportunities for teachers in the United States and in Israel and periodic visits by U. S. experts in Jewish education to lecture at Jewish teacher-training institutions in South America.

Most men can generally wear comfortable shoes throughout their lifetime but the ironical rules of fashion often condemn women to the discomfort, pains and aches of impractical and unhealthy shoes. To be comfortable and healthy, shoes should protect the feet without hindering their natural movement and flexibility.

The Jews Of Australia

BY DAVID J. BENJAMIN, OF SYDNEY, N.S.W.

The history of Australian Jewry has proceeded on different lines from that of the Jews of Europe. The emphasis has been on the building of communities and on the strengthening of Jewish organizations in various cities rather than on efforts to ensure the continuation of Jewish life and tradition where they have existed for centuries. A comparison of Australian Jewish history with that of another country can best be made with that of the U. S., which similarly has grown from a handful of Jews in one or two cities to a chain of strong communities studded over the country.

Jews have been in Australia since its earliest years but little is known of their life before 1817 when a small number, perhaps twenty, organized a Chevra Kadisha in Sydney. Those men were English Jews coming from families which had spent at least some time, often some generations, in England and they were imbued with vigorous loyalty both to Judaism and to British tradition. Their influence, coupled with the fact that the Australian environment is British, has made the Australian Jewish community an integral part of Anglo-Jewry. From that beginning in 1817 the story has been one of continual growth of population and institutions although organized communal life is the creation only of the last decade.

In 1828 regular services were being held in Sydney in private houses but it was not until 1833 that the first Synagogue was opened, by which time the population was about 350. Difficulty was for long experienced in finding a suitable Minister and in arranging educational facilities for the children. Eventually these problems were largely overcome, though to some extent they are still with us today for the distance from the main centres of Jewish life has constantly hindered development.

The emphasis in these early years was entirely on religious matters. There was no thought of the complicated communal organization such as exists in all States today. Even the relationship of the community to the secular authorities was governed by religious considerations and for long centered around such matters as land grants for Synagogue buildings, Government aid to Jewish Schools and subsidies towards Ministers' salaries. After the settlement of these outstanding matters little contact was made or was necessary between the Jews as a body and the Government so that they were free to concentrate upon their internal affairs.

Growth in numbers and prosperity soon came so that the original Synagogues were too small. The Boards of Management of these early congregations controlled or guided all Jewish activity with the result that their leaders were acknowledged as heads of the Jewish community both by Jews and Gentiles.

Exactly similar principles governed the history of the Jews in all the colonies (now called States). Shortly after their several foundations Jews arrived, busied themselves in establishing congregations and prospered. The most vigorous development was in the 1840's, although the gold rushes of the following decade gave a fillip to the growth of Jewries in Victoria. The Synagogue in Hobart was founded in 1843, that of Launceston in 1844, Melbourne in 1841 (only four years after the foundation of the city) and Adelaide in 1848. Brisbane, a town of little importance until after Queensland became a separate colony in 1859, had few Jews and no Synagogue until 1866. Western Australia, to which Jews were not attracted in the early years of the colony, had no congregation until Fremantle Jews organized themselves in 1887.

The Jews did not confine themselves to the capital cities. Numbers took up land and many families assisted in the pioneering of country towns, especially in New South Wales and Victoria, as owners of stores, hotels and other businesses. In some of the larger towns congregations developed and Synagogues were built. Their names and dates of commencement give some indication of the wide-spread Jewish settlement of last century: Ballarat 1855, Bendigo 1856, Geelong 1854, Goulburn 1871, Maitland 1879, Toowoomba 1872, Coolgardie 1894, Kalgoorlie 1896, Newcastle 1901.

Despite the existence of country congregations the vast majority of Australia Jewry lived, in the last century as in this, in the two chief capitals, Sydney and Melbourne. By 1871 there were 7,000 Jews scattered over the continent. The Sydney and Melbourne Synagogues were far too small, even though off-shoots now existed, and in 1878 the present spacious Great Synagogue in Sydney was consecrated. Extensions to the Melbourne building were made in 1877. For many years the Great Synagogue and the Melbourne Hebrew Congregation carried on as the central Jewish institutions, but the growth of population and the necessity for a greater number of organizations to provide channels of activity resulted in the birth of a number of bodies all more or less connected with the Synagogue.

Movement of population within the cities led eventually to the growth of new Synagogues, not all conforming to the ideas of the parent bodies, and the diversity of origin of the migrants assisted in the splitting of effort. Many were not happy in the English environment and sought other avenues in which they could retain more of the habits of their native land.

Resulting from these trends we have the present position in Sydney and Melbourne where there are a number of Synagogues and organizations catering for a wide diversity of opinions and activities. The smaller capital cities still have only one Synagogue each, conservative rather than orthodox in tendency.

Orthodoxy, however, is still a live force. Even in the conservative congregations there are many whose life is orthodox. It is these, a minority though they be, who give the spiritual strength to their congregations. It is a pity that more of them are not among the leaders. Leadership, however, is still the preserve of the successful rather than the religious, a fact which has drawn severe criticism by certain of the Rabbis in recent months. It is probable that little alteration can be expected, for those who are most imbued with the religious spirit are, all too often, unable or unwilling to accept the burden of leadership quite apart from the fact that, being in a minority, they will have little chance of election.

There are, especially in Sydney and Melbourne, orthodox congregations. They spring from the more recent arrivals, particularly from those who came from Poland in the years before the war. There is in all these bodies a sprinkling of German and, especially in Melbourne, a virile group of Hungarian Jews. Their numbers are small and as yet their influence has to make itself felt in the community at large. One group in Sydney has recently built itself a beautiful little synagogue capable of seating some 300 people, and has established shiurim each week-night including a course in Talmud Baba Betzia in English given by a young Rabbi from London.

In Melbourne orthodox strength is largely centered in one suburb where the influence of Rabbi Gurewicz (who was recently in America) is outstanding. In the other capital cities Orthodoxy makes itself felt only to the extent that individuals can influence synagogue practice and Jewish life and thought. In Perth, for instance, the orthodox element retains sufficient strength to be able each year to out-vote a motion calling for a mixed choir, but in the older established conservative congregations in Sydney and Melbourne no group could do so.

The effect of the swamping of the orthodox has been most serious from one point of view. It has long been Anglo-Jewish tradition, in which Australia shares, that the Rabbi's position is not one of leadership but rather one of communal service at the behest of his Board of Management. The result, all too often, is that the Rabbi's freedom to teach Judaism as he sees it is restricted. A preacher who, for instance, constantly insisted on Kashruth would speedily find himself reprimanded by his Board. A religious leader who viewed with distaste the action of the lay heads in themselves disregarding Jewish law would, at the least, be unwise to say so from his pulpit.

All this tends to blunt the Jewish consciousness of a community. Probably the only way in which this trend can be overcome is for more of the orthodox to seek positions of leadership and to bring their influence to bear so that the Rabbi becomes free to undertake his task — the training of his community in Jewish living. Australia probably is not alone in this unfortunate state of affairs. English and American newspapers prove that similar problems exist in those countries.

No examination of Jewish life in Australia would be complete without reference to the present tragic position of Jewish education, even though the communities elsewhere are suffering similarly. Great hopes have been held out by the establishment of a Day School in Melbourne and by the promise of one for Sydney. These schools will solve the problem for a number of children, but they cannot cope with all those who need Jewish education. For them there are only the afternoon and Sunday Hebrew classes together with (in some States) brief religion lessons in the Government schools.

It has been the practice in New South Wales and Victoria for over half a century for all denominations to have the right of entry for a stated period each week to those schools, but unfortunately the period is too short and difficulties of grading too great to allow of much useful work being done. Classes of the Talmud Torah type are carried on devotedly but the whole system needs reorganising and the attitude of parents towards Jewish education needs revitalizing. Many Jewish leaders are at present actively concerned in attempting to improve educational facilities and, although the present position is bad, there are hopes for improvement over the next few years.

The most striking manifestation of Jewish life in Australia in recent years has, of course, been the growth of Zionism. If little is said of it here that is not because it is unimportant, but rather because Zionist development has proceeded in Australia along the same lines as those which it has followed in other countries of the Diaspora. The establishment of Israel has brought about a new spirit in many people, although the unhappy events which preceded it alienated many Australian Jews who combined with their Jewishness a devoted loyalty to Britain. This phase is, however, passing with the improvement in relations between Britain and Israel. The majority of Australian Jewry is, one feels, wholeheartedly in sympathy with Israel although, of course, attachment to it has infinite variations.

Nothing more than a general view is here possible but closer examination will show that that attempt to sum up Australian Jewish history and thought in a few words is not inaccurate. The story of all Jewries of the Commonwealth, large and small, has proceeded along the same way, differing in detail rather than in effect. The main distinction which can be drawn between the large communities of Sydney and Melbourne on the one hand and the smaller communities on the other is one of size.

As these smaller Jewries grow they will almost certainly find the differences of approach and dissensions arising in the same way as they have in Sydney and Melbourne. Again the names of those participating in the communal growth have differed but their ideal, the building up of a Jewry in Australia, has been the same.

There is no branch of Australian activity in which Jews have not shared. In politics, commerce, law, local government, the armed forces, medicine, sport, Jews have been prominent. The variety of occupations has been as great as the divergences between their interests in communal matters. One result of this spread of interest has been the necessity, felt particularly for the last few years, for a large number of organizations within the community. Bodies have been created in all States devoted to charity, education, worship, sport, social activities, Zionism, Jewish politics of various types and, in later years, communal organization and coordination.

These last-named groups have finally, after more than a century of Jewish life, come together in one Executive Council of Australian Jewry which acts in all matters affecting the community as a whole as its official spokesman.

The earliest Jews of this country were, as has been said, English, but there have always been considerable migration from countries other than Britain. It is not possible to say how many of the modern Jewish communities are British or non-British by birth but it is clear that the English element is still strong though its influence is weakening.

The population trend of the last century shows that the community has grown by migration rather than by natural increase, with the result that much of the burden of maintaining the community in existence has fallen on the migrants rather than on the native-born whose drift has become alarming. It has been said with considerable truth that Australian Jewry lives only because of migration. Largely though the migration

The Hard Lot Of Chana-Lea

BY ESTHER LEVIN

My sister-in-law Chana-Lea lifted the lid off a huge pot that bubbled and simmered energetically on the stove, and frowned into its interior.

"A woman's lot is a difficult one." She dipped a spoon into the contents and sipped abstractedly. "She slaves and slaves, from morning till night, her work is never finished. Now it's this and then it's that. And what does she get for it?" She replaced the lid with a resounding bang, and turned to regard me with the lift of a triumphant eyebrow.

"Tell me, what does she get for it?"

"You say, Chana-Lea."

"On and on it goes from morning till night, first with the one thing and then with the other, never a moment's peace. Now a man's work when he closes his business . . ." A sudden thought struck her and she stopped. Then she lifted her head and, in a huge stentorian bellow that shattered the peacefulness of the Sunday morning into a million fragments, she addressed the stratosphere.

"Chi-am! Chi-am! Did you fetch the parcel from the Post Office yesterday like I told you? Chi-am!"

We waited, and then pale and trembling my brother-in-law came stumbling into the room, one hand still clutching the Sunday paper that he had obviously been hoping to read in the privacy of the bathroom.

"What — what — Chanele — Did you want something, Chanele?"

"From the Post Office the parcel," said Chana-Lea calmly, and there was a terrifying silence.

I felt sorry for my brother-in-law. After all, a man forgets! He works hard enough all day, and business, Heaven knows, is terrible. And then the phone begins to ring, and the instructions start piling up. "Bring this, get that." I know just how it is. I'm a married man myself, and my wife, may she be well, is Chana-Lea's sister.

Chana-Lea broke the silence.

"Ai, ai, ai, what it is to be a woman!" she mourned, and her sigh shook the rafters of the ceiling.

She turned once more to her pots and pans, and suddenly the atmosphere of the kitchen was heavy with her martyrdom, and the shortcomings of her unfortunate spouse.

"Never any co-operation, no help. Everything she must do herself. Go," she said kindly to Chiam. "Go and read your newspaper. Is it your fault that you are interested only in politics? After all, what am I? Only a woman, that's all! A stupid creature that makes demands! Tell me, do I ask for diamonds? Do I ask for blocks of flats? Do I say to you 'Chiam . . .'"

But Chiam was no fool. Go, she had said. Escape, fly. He had needed no second invitation.

I thought it was time to change the subject. After all, if I was to stay to lunch — my wife, God bless her, was away on holiday — it was better to eat in a peaceful atmosphere.

"How was the rummy, last night?"

"Aha, the rummy!" Gratification flooded Chana-Lea's soul. She beamed. "Believe it or not, Mendele, I won five pounds twelve shillings. Like little birds the middle pips came flying into my hands, it was too beautiful to watch. Like little angels straight out of Heaven. Not to mention the jokers! Ai Mendele, but you should have seen the faces. They don't forgin you, you know, I don't have to tell you. A katz zoll zei oefessen, as long as you're losing you're popular. Everybody likes you, you're a good feller. But if, Heaven help you, you have a run of luck . . .!" Her silence spoke volumes.

"And Chiam?" But even as I spoke, I knew that I had once more made a mistake. We men never know when to keep our mouths shut. Gloom seemed suddenly to have descended upon the kitchen where Chana-Lea was busy now on the kreplich. She said, "That schlimazl!"

I waited but curiosity got the better of me. "How—how much?"

Chana-Lea slammed the rolling pin down on a lump of dough so that everything on the table jumped in the air.

"Eleven pounds! But poker he must play. Not solo, no. You can't lose much at solo. At poker you can lose. You can lose your boots at poker, your house, your business, Heaven forbid, even your wife. Devil take her — what's that to you? But poker you must play."

"Oh come, Chaim doesn't play poker as much as all that!"

"A man like Chiam," pronounced Chana-Lea attacking the dough as if it were her bitterest enemy, "should never play poker. With his mazel, he should stick to marbles instead. If he were a lucky player, now, if he occasionally brought back say, twenty pounds — ten pounds — a five — I'd say, 'Chiam, play poker.' But . . ." She shook her head. "What we women have to put up with!" And bitter-has been, it has never swamped the British feeling of Australian Jewry. Though the migrant himself may retain much from the land of his birth his children become as other Australians.

Many of the outstanding names of Australian Jewry have been the children of non-British parents, two outstanding among them being Sir Isaac Isaacs, who was the first Australian Governor General and a Chief Justice of the High Court, and General Sir John Monash, who commanded the Australian Armies in the First World War. The service which two men such as these gave is by far the best indication of two trends which mark Australian Jewish history: the complete equality of the Jew with the non-Jew in Australia and the ability of the children of non-British parents to assimilate themselves completely into Australian life without at the same time losing their Jewish identity. As long as Australian Jewry can produce men of this type the community here will continue to be honored both by its own members and by those outside it. That is the lesson of Australian Jewish history as it has for more than a century been the aim of Australian Jews.

This article is from Jewish Life.

nese was once more in possession of Chana-Lea's soul.

I make one more effort. "Tell me, how is the young ballabosta these days? I hear they bought a house, mit glick."

"Thank you, thank you." This time, it seemed, I had struck oil. Her face lit up. "Yes, my Merele, thank God, is nicely settled. A fine match, he's a rich man, my son-in-law. So he's no chicken — tell me, is anyone counting the years? As long as she's happy, am I right?"

"Past question. Whereabouts is the house?"

"In Lawyer Hutton." Chana-Lea's voice expressed pride. She handled the kreplich fondly. "A fine house, swimming pool, tennis court, everything the heart desires. She is busy now on the furniture, and that let me tell you, is no picnic. Before they could get what they wanted, believe you me, they walked their feet off. From one wholesale place to the next, from factory to factory. She was so worn out one day at Jacksons' and Johnsons' that she had to phone for the chauffeur to come and take her home. Nearly, nearly she didn't go out to play rummy that afternoon, but of course, she didn't want to let the people down. You know how it is with a fifth hand at the last minute. Yes, it broke my heart to see her. 'Merele,' I said, 'Now you know what it is to be a woman, the ballabosta of a house. Not only with the bedroom suite, and the shmedroom suite, but wait till it comes to the curtains and the carpets, then you'll see!'

"Yes," said Chana-Lea, the last of the kreplich now busily bubbling in the pot. "Everything depends on the woman, her soul is not her own. She is tied to the house, the servants, the visitors, the husband — she is everybody's slave. Come and sit on the stoop now, the native girl will bring us tea. Chi-ami!"

This story is from Jewish Affairs.

A synthetic building material developed in Sweden will be produced in a factory which will begin production at Haifa in May. Known as Ytong, the material is popular in Sweden despite the abundance of cement and timber there. It can be used for load-bearing walls in buildings up to six storeys, is an excellent heat and sound insulator, water and fire resistant and not subject to shrinking, rotting or cracking. Lime and siliceous dune sand, the raw materials for Ytong, are inexpensive and are abundant in Israel. Ytong weighs about a quarter less than concrete and while similar to stone, is easy to cut and can be worked like wood. It is available for flooring and roofing, as well as outside construction.

Turkish Jewry Needs Educated Leaders

The number of Jews now living in Turkey has dwindled to 47,000 as a result of the emigration movement to Israel, which started two years ago. 34,000 Jews have left for the new State since then and about 1,000 have returned. The mass exodus to Israel was chiefly motivated by enthusiasm and the desire to settle and find better living conditions in the Holy Land. The return of the relatively small number of emigrants is due to the fact that they were unprepared for, and could not adapt themselves to, the way of life in the new State.

The emigration mainly affected the Jewish communities in the provincial areas of Turkey where Judaism is upheld solely by the observation of religious laws and traditions. In those provinces, flourishing in the past, the Jewish population today consists chiefly of older people. The younger generation has settled in Israel. The principal Jewish community in Turkey remains that of Istambul with about 35,000 members. The other main centre is that of Izmir with 4,000 Jews.

An event of major importance for Turkish Jewry was the adjustment of Turkey to a democratic way of life. During the twenty-five years of the republican regime, the Government often acted contrary to the word and spirit of the Constitution which guarantees full rights and liberties to all citizens, including the minorities. It was part of the former Government's policy to eliminate the non-Moslem elements, including foreigners, from Turkey's public life. After the first World War, Government policy changed in the light of new world events. The spirit of the Constitution was gradually carried out, though not completely. After 1945, anti-Semitism and discrimination were no longer a danger in Turkey. The attitude towards the Jews and other minorities improved even more when the Democratic Party came to power. On the morrow of taking office, the new Minister of the Interior sent a message to all sections of the administration that "it was the new Government's intention to exercise administrative power without any discrimination among citizens and by putting the democratic clauses of the law into effect."

Later, the discriminatory tax, introduced in 1942, which ruined the economic position of the Jews, was for the first time discussed in Parliament. Cabinet Ministers and Deputies frankly attacked the former Government on this question. Regional conferences of the Democratic Party urged that the money and property previously confiscated be restituted. Salamon Adatto, the only Jewish M.P., and a very influential member of the Democratic Party (to whom the Party itself owes much of its electoral success), was appointed head of the Parliament's Labour Committee, the highest political post ever held by a Jew since the foundation of the Republic in Turkey. Following Mr. Adatto's efforts, the new Government recently decided to delete from the citizens' identity cards all reference to religion.

A recent important announcement regarding the right of members of minorities to hold civil service positions has not yet been put into effect. On the other hand, anti-Semitism has been denounced on several occasions in the course of last year. The Mayor of Istambul assured Jewish leaders a "Turkey would never permit a repetition of the mistakes of the past with regard to minorities and the spreading of the poisonous ideas of anti-Semitism." It is noteworthy that Turkey was among the first countries to ratify the Genocide Convention, and a legal commission has been set up to introduce the necessary change in the country's legislature system. Jewish leaders were assured of the Government's sympathy, and the Mayor of Istambul informed the Chief Rabbi of that city soon after his appointment that the authorities were ready to hear any request from Jewish leaders on their communal questions.

Another development of importance to Turkish Jewry which took place in the year 5710 was the transformation in the Communal organization. Jewish affairs in Istambul and Izmir are handled by two distinct Councils of the Chief Rabbinate: the Religious Council (dealing with religious matters) and the Lay Council (dealing with welfare, culture, etc.) Elections to both Councils had not taken place since 1931, and as a result of deaths, resignations, and departures, most seats had remained vacant all the time. Public pressure forced the leaders to proceed with new elections which were held in January, 1950. They were not general elections, as expected, and aimed only at filling the vacant seats. Moreover, the names of the candidates were supplied by the Lay Council direct and the public was not informed of these elections. The result was that the "elections" passed unnoticed.

With their newly "elected" members, both Councils met for the first time since 1936 in a General Assembly last April. Sharp criticism was voiced by several members who charged that nothing positive had been done during this long period to solve the problems of Turkish Jewry. During the same session a new Lay Council was established and Dr. S. Abrevaya, elected to the post of president of the Jewish Community, occupied for nineteen years by H. Soriano. The new Lay Council appointed two special commissions in May to deal with two major problems — to find a suitable candidate for a Chief Rabbi (a position which has not existed in the country for twenty years) and to change the present Constitution of the Chief Rabbinate (which dates back to the 1870's). No decision has as yet been taken on these questions.

Elections were also held for the first time in many years for the Communal Council of Istambul which are responsible for the administration of synagogues, relief institutions, and schools in their respective areas. In other centres, about fifty percent of the Jews participated in the elections and in all cases most votes were cast in favour of younger elements.

The economic position of Turkish Jews is satisfactory, and the majority of the Jews are now better off than they were. The main occupation of Jews throughout the country is trade. In Istambul and other cities, many of the import-export establishments and stores, as well as a good number of factories, are owned by Jews. Jewish merchants and industrialists are not subject to any discrimination and their chief contribution to the country is in the economic field. The measures adopted by the new Government to liberalize trade and encourage private investment were particularly welcomed by Jews. A high percentage of Jews is also to be found in the liberal professions and in different types of office employment. There are few Jewish workers and no Jews in agriculture.

There is no cultural movement of Jewish interest in Turkey. Jews are assimilated to the Turkish, French, and Anglo-Saxon culture; very few are acquainted with Jewish cultural issues and Hebrew. Turkish Jews also suffer from the lack of proper means of Jewish information, though they are eager to learn about the events taking place in Israel and in the Jewish world.

The present problems of Turkish Jewry are manifold. Most deeply felt is the lack of Western-minded, capable, and energetic leaders. Once a good communal organisation is set up, the rehabilitation of Turkish Jewry will follow suit. Such a rehabilitation is necessary in the organisational, religious, cultural, and educational fields. Among the major problems in these different fields are: the changing of the present constitution of the Chief Rabbinate; the appointment of a well qualified Chief Rabbi; the setting up of a Federation of the different communities in the country (which at present operate without any contact); the fight against the indifference of the public to local Jewish matters; the establishment of contacts with American and European Jewish communities and organizations of whose activities little is known.

Young Jews from Turkey should go to Jewish centres abroad to be trained as group leaders and spiritual leaders. The Jewish cultural movement (which does not exist in the country at present) should be encouraged. The Jewish High School should be reorganised and there should be religious classes in schools, which were allowed two years ago by the Government and which have been included in the curriculum of State and private schools since then. The introduction of the Hebrew language in schools and other cultural centres should be encouraged. To solve these and many other problems which Turkish Jewry is facing today, a serious approach to the authorities, who have shown considerable sympathy and understanding towards the Jews, should be made as a first step. The rehabilitation of Turkish Jewry depends on such a move and there is little doubt that it would be successful.

Benjamin A. Cohen, Chilean diplomat and assistant secretary general of the United Nations for public information received a silver plaque from the Men's Club of Congregation Emanu-El in tribute to his career as a "statesman, peacemaker and friend of mankind." The award was presented to Mr. Cohen by Dr. Julius Mark, senior rabbi, at a club dinner in the temple's hall, in New York, 1 East Sixty-fifth Street. Former chargé d'affaires of the Chilean Embassy in Washington, Mr. Cohen also served as his country's Ambassador to Bolivia and Venezuela. Earlier in his career, Mr. Cohen was a newspaper man.

Allies To Look After Restitution In Germany

Dr. Israel Goldstein, chairman of the Western Hemisphere Executive of the World Jewish Congress expressed "deep appreciation" at U. S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy's recent policy declaration "that restitution in Germany will remain a reserved matter of the Allied powers." Dr. Goldstein pointed out that Mr. McCloy's praiseworthy statement was fully in accord with the request made by the Congress to the Foreign Ministers of the U.S., Britain, and France then meeting in New York.

Speaking in the name of the Jewish victims of German spoliation at that time, the Congress had called upon the Allied Powers to retain the restitution of Jewish property as a "reserved matter" in any revision of the occupation status. The Congress was therefore gratified to know that the Allied Powers agreed to guarantee the restitution to surviving Jews and to Jewish organizations, constituting the claimants to heirless Jewish property, of the property lost by individual Jews and Jewish communities in the countries occupied by the Nazi Government. The WJC had requested "that the Western Allies elicit from West Germany a solemn pledge to help carry the burden of rehabilitating, in countries of their choice, the Jewish masses who have been impoverished, made homeless and physically incapacitated as a direct result of the anti-Jewish extermination campaign carried on by the wartime government of Germany."

The WJC request had stated that processing of the claims will have to be carried on for several years to come and the Germans have shown reluctance to introduce the required legislation. "It is therefore necessary," the WJC had said, "that restitution remain a matter of concern of the Allies and that the West German government be bound to respect the legislation enacted and to implement it faithfully and speedily."

The WJC also pointed out that most of the claimants live abroad, but foreign ownership was the result of the forced emigration of the owners who at the time of acquisition were residents of Germany." They should therefore be given the possibility, they argued, to liquidate these assets on reasonable conditions with the right to transfer the monies realized to their countries of residence. Their properties must not be subjected to any taxes or levies imposed upon the general population of Germany since the claimants in this case were victims of Nazi persecution. Adequate machinery should be provided for the conversion, within reasonable time limits, of the monies reclaimed from Germany, into the currency of their countries of present residence.

An area of one million dunams is to be covered by trees at a cost of IL. 20 million, half of which is to come from the JNF and half from the Jewish Agency's Settlement Department, according to Dr. Joseph Weitz, Director of the Jewish National Fund. About 60 new settlements will be established by settlers who will earn their living by planting trees in winter and by soil conservation work in summer. Plans of the Ministry of Agriculture call for the cultivation of an additional 3 million dunams of land by the end of 1953. Another 120,000 dunams of land would come under irrigation within that period (bringing the total to 420,000) while deciduous fruit trees would cover 75,000 dunams and citrus groves 30,000 dunams. By the same time there would be an additional 26,000 milk cows.

Two Shanghai DP Re-Enter. U.S.; Home At Last

Two of the 106 "Shanghai D.P.s" who were shuttled across the United States from San Francisco to Ellis Island and on to Germany last spring returned to the United States. They are Dr. and Mrs. Hugo Lewinsohn, German refugees, who arrived with 462 other immigrants. Immigration officials said eleven of the passengers were detained, two under the internal security act.

For the Lewinsohns, their reentry into the United States was the end of their flight from Germany in 1941 which led them across Europe and Asia to Shanghai, on to San Francisco, Ellis Island and back to Germany for visa processing and re-entry under the displaced persons act.

It also was a reunion for the Lewinsohns with their sons, Peter, twenty, and Thomas, nineteen, who have been in the United States some time. The two youths had seen their parents briefly on Ellis Island in June.

William Rosenwald, honorary president of the United Service for New Americans and national chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, also met the couple and thanked Dr. Lewinsohn for his service as chief physician of the Joint Distribution Committee's hospital in Shanghai.

"We feel very happy now," Mrs. Lewinsohn said, "after such a bad time."

Dr. Mordecai M. Kaplan, founder of the Jewish Reconstructionist movement, Dr. Eugene Kohn, managing editor of The Reconstructionist Magazine, and Abraham G. Duker, associate in Jewish Studies at the Training Bureau for Jewish Communal Service, have been named to the faculty of the newly organized Reconstructionist School of Jewish Studies, at 15 West 86th Street, New York, which is sponsored by the Jewish Reconstructionist Foundation, Inc. The opening of the School in New York is a prelude to the extension of its facilities to other communities. Chicago, Ill.; Bronx, N. Y.; Cedarhurst, L. I., have already arranged for courses to be given by other members of the faculty. This experiment in adult Jewish education has been initiated in response to many requests from Jewish communities throughout the United States for some agency which would take the responsibility for indicating the approach necessary to foster creative Jewish living in America. Further information may be obtained from the Jewish Reconstructionist Foundation, 15 West 86th Street, New York.

Urges Expansion Of Centres

Expanded programs for the more than 300 Jewish community centers in America were recommended at Chicago, Ill., at the annual meeting of the National Jewish Welfare Board's financial council, by Richard W. Dammann, of New York, chairman of the board's Jewish center division.

Mr. Dammann said there was an increased need for recreational agencies to provide "outlets for the release of the new tensions and anxieties in peoples' lives" brought about by the international situation. He declared that Jewish community centers are helping by "meeting the special needs of service men's families, working mothers and children."

"No field of our work is of greater merit than our youth program," he said. "Youth must receive every attention and opportunity if it is to represent the values inherent in Judaism and American democracy. To achieve this means increased financial support by the board."

The Hebrew University will open a special laboratory for the study of poliomyelitis shortly and will be assisted in its investigations by a group of professors at Yale University. The investigations will be concerned with isolating the causes of the disease and examining the appearance of foreign bodies in the blood as well as checking the number of cases in various age groups. Part of the supplies necessary to carry out these investigations are already on their way to Israel.

MONTREAL MEETINGS

● CANADIAN Jewish Congress Father Emile Legault, c.s.c., director of the French-Canadian dramatic group, Les Compagnons, will address an open meeting of Le Cercle Juif de Langue Française on Monday, November 13, at 8:30 p.m., at the Mount Royal Hotel, Salon "A". Dr. H. R. Wikus is president of the French-speaking Jewish group. Les Compagnons was founded by Father Legault in 1937 in Ville St. Laurent. The following year the Provincial Government granted him a bursary to carry out dramatic studies in Europe and in 1939 a permanent theatre was established at the College de St. Laurent. The company moved to Montreal in 1940 and played at Cote des Neiges, the Hermitage, and the Gesu Hall. Two years ago they secured their own theatre at the corner of Sherbrooke and DeLorimier. In 1947, Les Compagnons won the Bessborough Drama Award. The company has appeared in many centers throughout Quebec as well as at Ottawa, Toronto; New York, Boston, and other American cities, and has won international fame and critical honours on this continent as well as in Europe. Many of the artists trained by Les Compagnons are in radio and television work in Canada and in France. The dramatic center of Les Compagnons conducts courses in the dramatic arts including rhythm and folk dance, history of the theatre, voice, etc. Father Legault is a native of St. Laurent; has taught at the Holy Cross Seminary, served as chaplain to the Catholic Student Youth; is chairman of the Regional Drama Festival and governor of the Drama Festival; and is editing a new bilingual drama magazine, "Theatre Canada," whose first issue will soon appear. Dr. Samuel Levine, of the staff of the Congress, will conduct a survey of the Jewish communities of Corner Brook and of St. John's. He will visit Newfoundland in the middle of November and will address meetings. Dr. Levine is the son of the late Rabbi Aaron Levine, member of the Polish Parliament and chairman of the Council of Polish Rabbis. He is a graduate in history of the University of Cracow and of the Rabbinical Seminary of Chachmai, Lublin. He received his ordination from the Polish Rabbinate and was contributor and editor of various Polish and Yiddish publications in Europe. He reached Canada from Japan in October, 1941, aboard the last refugee ship to leave Japan for America before Pearl Harbour. For the past nine years he has been librarian and archivist, secretary to the Dominion Council, the education committee, the Public Relations Committee; and has been responsible for the daily information service.

● MOUNT SINAI Sanitorium Ladies' Auxiliary paid their annual visit to the Sanitorium at Prefontaine. Mrs. H. B. Zarr, president, was accompanied by executive, board and Unit members who travelled there by chartered bus and cars. They were received by the superintendent, J. L. Fox and by the physician-in-chief, Dr. N. Lewin. Equipment provided by the Auxiliary was shown by Dr. Lewin. It consisted of a portable X-ray machine, an X-ray viewing box, a laboratory incubator, frigidaire, and binocular microscope. An oxygen tent, donated by the Long Family, was responsible for saving a life the first week it was installed. Those who are no longer bed patients recuperate in two health rehabilitation bungalows, which house eight women or eight men, away from the main building and bed patients. The men's bungalow is named in memory of the late Hyman M. Ripstein. On the men's floor in the main building, there is an occupational therapy room, also a barber shop. On the women's floor, there is a large linen room, also a recreation room. All bed patients have been provided with pillow radios, with central control, and each radio can be dialed to three stations. Two moving picture projectors were donated by the Auxiliary and a permanent screen and stage were built in memory of the late George Rotsky. Although the Sanitorium is non-sectarian, it observes the dietary laws and has two main kitchens, besides two diet kitchens on the ward floors. The synagogue was decorated and furnished by Unit 46, under Mrs. S. Charnoff, and provided with candelabra, everlasting light, and prayer books. The library on the same floor was furnished by the Lauterman Family. From the sun-deck, patients view the countryside of the Laurentians. Through the Auxiliary, new linoleum was laid throughout the building, and Venetian blinds and draperies were provided wherever necessary. Building is under way for the new nurses' home. The Auxiliary has undertaken to build an auditorium on the ground floor of this building, with seating for 150 people; also a new and larger occupational therapy room which will give the patients an opportunity to learn handicrafts and display products to be sold. The nurses home and auditorium will be connected to the Sanitorium by a heated corridor. Luncheon was served to the visitors in the dining room.

and freedom of conscience in all fields;

4. continuation of the Provisional Government's policy on the import of meat (joint control between the Minister concerned and the Minister of Religious Affairs);

5. a law fixing the Knesset's term at four years, until January 1953;

6. a ministerial committee to clarify religious problems and maintenance of the status quo in religious affairs until these problems are resolved;

7. announcement to the Knesset by members of the coalition of their willingness to support the Government and participate in it without interruption until the termination of the first Knesset. The new Government is thus assured internal stability and a working majority for the balance of its term.

In presenting his new Cabinet, Mr. Ben-Gurion announced that the Government's program would continue to be the four-year development and absorption plan adopted by the Knesset in March 1949, as well as the economic reforms recently instituted. Controls and rationing would be continued as long as necessary, he said. Security of the State is dependent on immigration, as well as on the Army, and the Government will continue to devote its utmost efforts in this field. The Prime Minister announced that from the establishment of the State in May 1948, until the end of October, 510,000 new immigrants had reached the country, and he appealed to world Jewry to continue to play its part in the absorption program. There is virtually no unemployment in Israel outside of the immigrants' reception camps, and Israel's campaign against the black market has been extraordinarily successful, Mr. Ben-Gurion said.

After the vote of confidence, the Cabinet was sworn in and Mr. Geri and Mr. Lubianiker, the two new Ministers, were the first to take the oath. Mrs. Myerson and Mr. Kaplan, who are now in the United States, will be sworn in when they return to Israel. Commenting on the causes of the recent Cabinet difficulties, Mr. Ben-Gurion compared present conditions to those at the time of the Exodus from Egypt when a revolt against the leadership was caused by similar difficult conditions such as food and other shortages.

My Pilgrimage To Israel

All of us rejoice in the observance of the fifth anniversary of the United Nations, which was climaxed with an address by President Harry S. Truman at Lake Success. Israel rejoices in her membership in the United Nations. Israel remembers that she is the creation of the United Nations, through that memorable resolution of November 29, 1947, by the United Nations Assembly.

I vividly recalled the significance of all this, when I stood at the Mandelbaum Gate, bordering no-man's land which separates old Jerusalem from new Jerusalem and which constitutes the division between Israel and Trans-Jordan in the holy city. Here in this house on no-man's land, the United Nations Conciliation Committee was in session trying to find adjustments and solutions to the conflicting problems which a divided Jerusalem present. Here, at no-man's land, I was privileged to stand and observe a group of pilgrims under the leadership of the Bishop of Assisi, being transferred by Israel guards across no-man's land and given over to members of the Arab legion, who stood guard at the gate of old Jerusalem.

What a pity it is that as yet the United Nations has found no solution to the Jerusalem problem! One thing we are sure of, there will be no territorial internationalization of "this city of cities." Jerusalem is the historic capital of Israel and the Jews of Jerusalem who have defended the city from Arab hordes through sacrifice of blood and life, will never yield an inch of ground. The hope lies in an internationalization of the holy places, not only of Jerusalem, but throughout Palestine.

What a pity it is that under present conditions the great Hebrew University on Mount Scopus and the Hadassah Hospital are paralyzed in their work because the Arabs refuse to grant permission to the Israelis to pass through old Jerusalem to Mount Scopus. Yet, the hope of a solution lies with the United Nations, which has now become a more effective instrument for safe-guarding world peace in its united action in Korea. We believe that a United Nations Army constitutes an instrument by which to put down aggression and by which to punish an aggressor nation. What a tragedy it was that when Jerusalem, Jewish Jerusalem, was in agony, besieged by Arabs in the Spring and Summer of 1948, the United Nations stood helplessly looking on, because it had no armed force of its own. But now matters have changed and there is every hope that a second round between the Israelis and Arabs can be averted by the United Nations.

It is for this reason that we note with delight, that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its latest and last report to Secretary General Trygve Lie, the body recommended that the General Assembly urge both Trans-Jordan and Israel to begin direct discussions toward peace settlements, under United Nations auspices, without delay. There is no doubt that the failure of Israel and the Arab States, generally, to reach agreement on their differences, has had a detrimental effect on the structure of world peace and because of this, the entire Middle East finds itself under great tension. Israel has at all times requested direct peace negotiations with the Arabs.

There are those who believe that there is a parallel between Israel and the Crusaders. These believe that even as the Moslems fought for a hundred years the Crusaders, so the Arabs will for long continue to fight Israel, until they succeed in driving the Jews into the sea. But the parallel is incorrect. Israel is not an alien body in Palestine. Israel is at home in the ancestral home for which it has yearned and to which it has returned, after 2,000 years of homelessness.

Israel constitutes the only democracy in the Near East, a democracy which is surrounded by a sea of feudalism. The Arab neighbours of Israel are feudal states and most of the inhabitants of these States suffer from squalor and exploitation. The whole problem in the Middle East may be summarized in the symbolism of the camel versus the motor car. Progress is on the march through the Jew in the Middle East, and that progress is not only expressed through scientific and technical developments. The Jew has brought to the Middle East, the great Western ideas and ideals of democracy and personal freedom. The Middle East can be rejuvenated when there will come about a growing recognition of the rights of the common man to social welfare and democratic representation.

Israel is not merely an outpost of Western civilization. It is trying to blend modern civilization with the ancient religion Judaism and the cultural traditions of the Jewish people. Israel seeks at all times reconciliation with her Arab neighbours. Only in Arab and in Israeli co-operation can there be hope for a prosperous Middle East life.

That there are today three hundred thousand Arab refugees, is a problem which was not created by Israel, but by the misguided Arab leaders. It was none other than the Ex-Mufti and his cousin, Jamal Husseni, who called upon the Arabs to make a mass exodus from Palestine, when the Israeli-Arab war broke out. The purpose of it all was to set world opinion against the Jews and to arouse the neighbouring states against the Jews. Indeed, the Jews pleaded for the Arabs to remain within Palestine. The Jews were anxious to show how indeed Arab and Jew can live together and work together.

Why should the State of Israel now take over the liability of Arab refugees who fled the country? The aggressor must bear the guilt. Of course, Israel recognizes that the problem of Arab refugees constitutes a humanitarian problem and is willing to share with other Arab States in helping in the resettlement of these pitiful people who were misled by Arab agitators. Of course, Israel cannot take these refugees back, because if large numbers of them return, they could easily constitute an underground movement and thus endanger the very life of the Jewish State. Israel stands ready to compensate the Arabs for the properties which they left behind and which are now in possession of the State of Israel.

Happily, not all Arabs have fled the country. Within Israel today, there is an Arab population of one hundred and sixty-three thousand. This Arab minority has all rights, equal unto all citizens. Thus it is that in the Knesset, there are three Arab representatives and these are highly respected. And why not? Of all people, the Jews certainly know what it means to occupy the status of a minority within a state. Hence, there is great sympathy on the part of Jews toward the Arab population. Arabic is taught in all the Israel schools. The Hebrew University has as its leading department a programme for the study and the advancement of Arabic culture. It is significant here to observe that an Arab community within Israel known as the Druzes, constituting a population of 15,000, fought on the side of Israel in Israel's war for liberation.

It was good to visit old Beer Sheba, which is the gateway to the Negeb. When we saw Beer Sheba in 1935, it was an all Arab town. There was more traffic from flies on the walls of the cafe where we had lunch than the traffic in the town itself. Today Beer Sheba is really a boom town. It is a frontier town. Trucks, army trucks, trucks loaded with food supplies, crowd the streets of this ancient town first known to us through Abraham's sojourning in this place. Today, Beer Sheba has a population of 6,000. There is a feverish building activity, it is an all Jewish town and holds out a most promising future. A hundred and fifty miles south of Beer Sheba, across the Negeb there lies "Elath", the ancient port of Solomon. And behold today across the desert, the Negeb, water for the first time in thousands of years is being piped. What a blessing it will be for civilization when, through the joint effort of Arab and Jew, this wasteland will be converted into a land of fruitfulness and habitation!

Israel Opposes U. N. Recognition Of Franco

Consistent with its past stand, Israel voted against a resolution relaxing UN opposition to Franco Spain. Dr. Shmuel Eliashiv, speaking for Israel in the Ad Hoc Political Committee, stated that "there is no doubt that the regime of Franco Spain came to life only through the help of Hitler and Mussolini, and that Franco bound up his fate with these two regimes and with the hope of their victory." The present Spanish government "is the very regime blessed by Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy," he emphasized. "Furthermore, nothing has changed in Franco Spain since 1946, and we see no reason which could justify the change of attitude towards Franco Spain in the United Nations in 1950."

However, Dr. Eliashiv pointed out that Israel's opposition to the resolution was directed against the Franco regime and not the Spanish people. "For the people of Spain we have the highest respect and the warmest friendship and we look forward to the day when they will be represented in the United Nations by a democratic government," he concluded. The resolution, which opens the door for admission of Franco Spain into UN specialized agencies and relaxes the diplomatic ban against Franco, was adopted by the Committee by a vote of 37 to 10 with 12 abstentions. Arab States voted for the resolution.

The Regulations apply to every person engaged in the business of selling consumer goods at retail on credit, in the business of making loans, or otherwise engaged in financing the purchase of consumer goods.

The following requirements will be in effect when retail sales are made on the instalment plan on and after November 1, 1950:

	Minimum down payment	Maximum time to pay
Motor vehicles (e.g. passenger automobiles and motorcycles)	33⅓%	18 months
All other consumer goods.	20%	18 months

In no case shall the down payment be less than $5.00.

INSTALMENT PAYMENTS are to be in regular, approximately equal, amounts of not less than $5.00 monthly or $1.25 weekly. Instalment payments may be varied to meet the circumstances of persons such as farmers and commercial fishermen whose incomes are subject to seasonal fluctuations.
Similar terms apply to loans granted by banks or loan companies for the purpose of purchasing consumer goods at retail.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS ARE INCLUDED WITH REGARD TO REVOLVING CREDIT ACCOUNTS, permanent budget accounts, current budget accounts, and similar plans involving payment for goods by regular instalments.

ORDINARY CHARGE ACCOUNTS ARE NOT DIRECTLY AFFECTED by the present Regulations, but steps will be taken, if necessary, to see that charge accounts are not used to evade the regulations relating to instalment sales.

THE REGULATIONS REQUIRE SELLERS, LENDERS AND FINANCE COMPANIES to maintain records of transactions, to make them available for inspection, and to furnish information on request to authorized representatives of the Government of Canada.

CONSUMER GOODS include all goods with certain exceptions. A full list of the exceptions will be found in the Regulations.

For example, the Regulations DO NOT APPLY to sales of real estate, stocks, bonds, securities, goods for professional or business use, buses, trucks, building materials, implements and equipment used exclusively in farming and fishing.

Penalties are provided for violation of the Regulations.
